In the village of Nyekot, there lives an old woman. She is now 89 years. She lives in a hut alone. My mother told me that the woman gave birth to two children many years ago. Unfortunately, all her children and their father died in an accident. From there, the woman vowed never to produce other children.

She has a garden of fruit. In this garden, there are mangoes, guavas, and jack fruits. Whenever she gets someone passing, she calls them with a hand signal. She requests that person to help her pick the ripe fruit. She then takes to her house.

Children of Sango Primary School pass near this woman's house. When they greet her, she feels very happy. She calls them and tells them words of wisdom. She takes them to her house and gives them some of the fruit. "You are my dear grandchildren," she says. Many children feel comfortable while at her home.

Children who know this woman like her very much. They have also given her the name Jajja. Children help this woman by fetching water and sweeping her house.
