The night was as silent as a deserted cemetery expect for the buzzing of mosquitoes, croaking of frogs and hooting of owls from a distance probably spelling out evil spirits at night. No sooner had we slept than we heard the search of breaks. This was certainly in chaotic manner. I tiptoed slowly towards the window, my father was staggering awkwardly singing in a deep voice, "Bakuzala Mubala" which was his favourite song that meant born in the bar."

Suddenly, a loud bang was heard. My father had certainly kicked the door and it was broken into uncountable pieces. My mother completely started dashing towards the door, her heart throbbing with mighty beats. "You stupid woman, how long do you take to open the door?" my father inquired of mother menacingly. "Is this the kind of life you expect me to lead after making me discontinue with my education?" my mother asked as tears rolled down her rosy cheeks.

Nonsense! You are good for nothing. There is nothing you are telling me. Just bring food. My mother being sober obeyed and without dilly-dallying, lay the table with posho and beans. "Is this what you give me?" Am I a beggar to eat such food? Give me food, my father roared making us more frightened. From his sitting position, he came with fury, took the plate of beans and threw it on my mother's face. "Today, I will teach you a lesson," my mother said, her heart mounting courage. Before my father could cut once more, my mother took the plate of posho and hit him on his wide-open nostrils making him fall with a thud on the floor.

That was the time hell broke loose. My mother began beating my father and also went to defend himself, since he was drunk, I thought he could not defeat my mother but however hard she tried she could not manage. "Beat him! Teach him manners!" my little brother shouted running towards the kitchen. I was astonished to see him back with a mingling stick. My young brother John, my father's apple of the eye began beating up my father on his bottoms. There was nothing I could do but rather watch the drama which was unfolding pangs of sadness surged through my body.
